Firedance

Raku firing is a low-fire process:
the target temperatures are
the same as electric ^06 firing.
Expand your palette and color options by adding low-fire glazes with your raku!
Some will work better
than others.
Experiment and have fun!

GEORGIES RAKU GLAZES

No other firing technique offers the excitement, immediacy and drama of the raku firing process! Raku glazes produce a variety of color effects depending on firing and reduction techniques. The reduction process is absolutely necessary for these color results: you cannot get them from firing in an electric kiln. Your results will vary depending on environmental and firing variables (including combustible materials used). The color samples show only some of the possibilities. Use a 60 mesh screen if needed to break up any small chunks of material and stir well.

– Raku pieces are for decorative purposes only –
and should never be considered foodsafe or watertight.
